

Education and human development for sustainability

Important points to make

- Action for the SDGs are for everyone, everywhere!
- Possibilities of engagement in local challenges for sustainability is a democratic right.
- Understanding WHY we need to take action for the Sustainable Development Goals is crucial knowledge for everyone; the science behind it and the effects on our lives.
- Schools and informal education are keys to spreading knowledge about sustainability to ALL; from a young age.
- The voices of people from many different groups in society must be heard and listened to.

The New European Bauhaus impact

Spreading all the good things that are already taking place to MANY more.

Finding new ways TOGETHER.

Making people come together for ACTION.

Encourage NEW ways of finding solutions.

Cross-fertilisation strategies in my field

- Sustainability in human development and education can not be carried out without collaborations that cross borders (local, national or international)
- Activities that seem to mainly aim at students are generally just as good for others.
- Children, young people and teachers are not so different in the world. The issues of sustainability connect us.
- People from different groups need to MEET and work together– that is where the action takes place.

The creative aspects in my field and in the NEB

The creative challenges of finding NEW ways together are central.

The mixture of people from very different fields guarantee creative solutions.

The positive expectations on education and human development in the NEB creates new possibilities.

Experiences, ideas & actions contributing to a sustainable, inclusive and beautiful Europe

- To really communicate sustainability; leave your comfort zone and fan base.
- Sustainability and the fulfilment of the SDGs are for everyone. Leave no one behind! Find the possibilities for engagement.
- Collaborate- locally, nationally and internationally. Finding new ways and new thoughts.
- See our differences as an asset in the fight for a more sustainable future (but beware of trouble makers...).
